Conrad and Nature: A Reader. Routledge, 2018. (In the series Routledge Interdisciplinary Perspectives on Literature.)

An edited collection exploring nature's role in Joseph Conrad's fiction. This collection brings together modernist scholars and environmental critics to posit nature's significance to Conrad studies.

Green Modernism: Nature and the English Novel, 1900-1930. Palgrave Macmillan, 2015. (In the series Literatures, Cultures and the Environment ed. Ursula Heise). The first sustained critical exploration of nature's role in the English novel between 1900 and 1930. This study uses a materialist ecocriticism to empower new readings of influential texts like Heart of Darkness, Parade's End, Lady Chatterley's Lover, and Armed with Madness. It delivers modernist studies a bridge to environmental criticism and a revived sense of activist modernism. [Reviews appearing in Modern Fiction Studies, Interdisciplinary Studies in Literature and Environment, English Literature in Transition, 20th Century literature.]

Contact: Mountain Climbing and Environmental Thinking. University of Nevada Press, 2008.

An illumination of North American attitudes toward nature, an analysis of climbing literature, and a theorization of the physical body in landscape, all woven through a collection of mountaineering narratives.
